Dear editors,

I was wondering when some farsighted business person was going to start operating those underwater safari trips on Broadhaven Bay.

That day seems to have arrived sooner than expected, as I spotted not one but two boats operating in the area over the Corrib Gas pipeline, as mother ships to two smaller vessels.

At least that's what I assume they were doing and not trying to find more metres long section of pipe blown out of the water belonging to SEPIL, to match that found by some local fisherman?

Lets hope that the heads of two government ministers and various state agencies are not buried in the same sand as the gas pipe, although a phone call I had from the EPA today, suggests that they are . . .

Sincerely,

Liam Power
