To whom it may concern

I wish to record my concern at the proposed plan associated with the development of Dublin port that would result in millions of tonnes of dredged material being dumped in Dublin bay over a period of years.

It is very likely that this material will have a serious impact on life in the bay and the very nature of dumping in this way cannot control where the material will move once it is in the water and will therefore impact on very broad and undefinable area.

I would ask that alternative options for the disposal of the dredged material be demanded.

Best Regards
