Sharapova is far from unstoppable

MARIA Sharapova's return to the French Open came to an abrupt halt at the hands of Garbine Muguruza.

The Russian, back on the Paris clay having missed the last two tournaments due to a doping ban, was swept aside 6-2 6-1 by the Spanish third seed.

If Sharapova were to write another autobiography this time quarter-final defeat is unlikely to feature too prominently.

It was her book 'Unstoppable', published last year, which had dominated the build-up to her scheduled fourth-round meeting with Serena Williams, until the American pulled out injured.

Williams had branded the book 'hearsay' and expressed her surprise at just how much she featured in its pages.

But Sharapova hit back, saying: 'I think it would be strange for me not to include someone that I have competed against for so many years. When you're writing an autobiography, I don't think there is any reason to write anything that's not true.'

It was probably the best return Sharapova managed all day.

'I knew it was going to be an intense match, because I hadn't played her for a long time,' said Muguruza.

Muguruza will face world number one Simona Halep, who got the better of Angelique Kerber over three sets, in the semi-final.

Meanwhile, reigning French Open champion Rafael Nadal is in big trouble in his quarter-final against Diego Schwartzman.

The Spanish 10-time winner is a set down to Argentinian 11th seed Schwartzman.

Nadal has lost just twice in 85 matches at Roland Garros, and the opening set was the first he has dropped in 38 consecutive sets at the tournament.

Schwartzman led 6-4 3-2 when rain forced the players off.

The players came back on just under an hour later and the Spaniard immediately broke serve to level the second set.

A hold and a break later Nadal was serving for the set, but at 30-15 the heavens opened again, forcing play to be stopped once more and halting Nadal in his tracks.

against Albanian cruiserweight Sefer Seferi, which it is intended will ultimately pave the way for a showdown with Joshua. Fury insists he's focused: 'I don't need any more messages — they know the message, and the message is I'm back.'

IRISH featherweight Michaela Walsh has sensationally beaten Italy's world champion Alessia Mesiano at the European Women's Elite Championships in Sofia, Bulgaria. The Belfast-born fighter will now meet Helina Bruyevich of Belarus in the quarter-finals, guaranteed a bronze medal.
